NEW MYTHOLOGIES

COMMENTARY BY JULIE OAKES

Anna Glynn, New Mythologies, Headbones Gallery - 2015

New Mythologies: Anna Glynn

There are states of mind that seem personified by a visual and Anna Glynn's work has been active in the emerging Australia - Sino art scene. Her home studio is in the rainforest at Jaspers Brush, NSW, Australia but she has frequently worked and exhibited in China.

The Chinese used landscape as a springboard from which to consider the great philosophical questions: What is life? How does individuality relate to the whole? How and to what extent is connectivity important? They would approach these concepts from a tangential viewpoint so as to leave open to interpretation - and further exploration - the subject being considered. Ink as a medium could approximate this openness so that by using washes with blurs between areas the relationship between one shape and another was suggested but not locked in. The relationship between self and the world was the subject of ink scrolls depicting landscapes that broached the sublime including references such as 'the unreachable mountain' or 'the unfathomable misty scope'. The Chinese landscape painters as they veiled the vista with clouds brought the challenging incomprehensible realities of distance and height into a manageable intake of information that soothed rather than irritated the viewer into accepting his limitations.

Using a wide range of animals from the exotic elephant to the common (even deemed 'urban nuisance') rabbit, Glynn characterizes the animal with recognizable human traits providing a bridge between a complex, sophisticated take on the otherness of species with a more child-like, approachable rendition. She has referred to her creations as "hidden worlds". Within the animals there are landscapes inhabited by other species, often at odds in character to the host animal such as an elephant who has on the interior spindly legged cranes.

In Anna Glynn's work, the lightness of being is made permissible and in the world of fine art this has not always been allowed. Beauty, once revered was given a back burner to individuality since the advent of abstract expressionism. Glynn brings back beauty. She broaches the diversity of being in the animal world through simplified characters, filled with semitransparent layers and then presented as elegant scrolls, with the painting mounted on silk, making animism a friend rather than a foe. Glynn calls forth the white from the black, the light from the heavy, the delineated from the suggested and allows a broader range of interpretation. Like Dylan's lyrics in She Belongs to Me: "She can take the dark out of the nighttime". Glynn's work is, like the Chinese landscapes, a respite from the difficult challenges of modernity while still acknowledging the issues.

Anna Glynn with her frequent exposure to China, uses the advantageous contingency of both countries to create a body of work that seamlessly marries sensibilities from each culture. The universality of her appeal is in line with current concerns focusing on environmental precariousness.

Furthering her research into culture and the environment Anna Glynn has created a soundscape as part of an interdisciplinary collaboration exploring the sounds of the Okanagan landscape completed at The Caetani Cultural Center with the biologist Peter Dalmazzo. Presented in conjunction with New Mythologies, the magic of nature is evoked.

Anna Glynn is a multimedia artist who works with a palette of painting, drawing, photography, sculpture, writing, music, sound, installation, film making, moving image, digital animation and theatre. Glynn's art-practice has been inspired by her working and collaborating internationally exploring different cultures and new materials.

In 2015 she is currently Artist in Residence at the Sitka Center for Art and Ecology in Oregon, USA. She was a finalist in the 2013 'Australian Art in Asia Awards' which recognised her ongoing commitment to international collaboration. In 2014 she was awarded Artist-in-Residence, Caetani Culture Centre & Allan Brooks Nature Centre, Canada. Also in 2014 she was awarded a Veolia Creative Arts Scholarship in recognition of her "commitment and contribution to the creative arts". She has undertaken a number of successful residencies both within Australia and internationally, including in 2013 in the Department of Visual Studies, Lingnan University, Hong Kong where she undertook research, taught multimedia, lectured and mounted the 'Wonderment' exhibition at the University.

Her film works have gained international awards: 'The Sun Worshipper' was an Official Selection for the 2015 Byron Bay International Film Festival, 'The Traveller' won the Animation section at the 2010 International Film Festival Ireland. In a unanimous decision by the judges, her short film 'Verse Versus' won the 2009 Australian Historic Houses Trust, Meroogal Women's Art Prize.

In 1998 she received an International Women's Day Award for contribution to 'Women, Art & the Community'. In 2009 her painting 'Brave Hunter' was chosen as the iconic Australian image for the cover of 'A Concise History of Australia'

She regularly exhibits internationally: including the Art Museum of Zhu Qi Zhan, Peking University/ China & the Kyoto Museum / Japan. Her soundscape work 'Yarra River Stories' was featured on the Australian Broadcasting Commissions Radio National '360 Documentaries' in 2011 and 2013.

She has been included in the following publications: 'Contemporary Australian Art,' 'Artists and Galleries of Australia,' 'A Dictionary of Women Artists in Australia,' 'Who's Who of Australian Visual Artists' & 'A Buyers Guide to Australian Art'.
